History

The Basel Mission, a protestant missionary society named for the Swiss city, was founded in 1815. Wurttemberg, Germany was also important to its history: all the Directors and most of the lecturers in the Mission college were recruited from here, as was more than half of the overseas staff. Missionaries were first sent to the Gold Coast in the 1820s; however due to illness, their presence was not truly felt until the 1840s. Other locations for the Mission were India, China, Cameroon and Kalimantan.

The two main goals of the Basel Mission for its first century were to build a Christian village culture among farmers, and to concentrate on building church life and education in the vernacular languages. In the 19th Century, the Mission ran Ghana's first organized school system, from the village primary school to the Teachers' Training College.

The Basel Mission reached its peak just before 1914 when more than 300 people were in their service abroad. Expelled during the period of World War I and World War II, the Basel Mission never regained its same presence from before the wars. In 2001, the Basel Mission merged with three other independent protestant mission societies to form mission 21.
