

Publishing: What Should I Write About?

Katherine Segal, Ph.D., LCSW
CSSW Online Faculty Development Series
10/24/22

Publication	Source of Inspiration
Developing a meaningful self-care plan that can help you heal from burnout. https://doi.org/10.7916/x059-qx87	An activity I lead clients and students through.
Which behavioral health Ph.D. is right for me? https://www.socialworktoday.com/archive/Summer22p30.shtml	Info I've shared with countless students via meetings and email.
Using PowerPoint portrait-oriented slides to maximize content sharing. https://edtechbooks.org/designing_engaging_interactive_synchronous_online_classes/portrait_oriented_slides	A skill I learned while teaching and thought others would want to learn about it.
Using polls to guide class check-in time. https://edtechbooks.org/designing_engaging_interactive_synchronous_online_classes/using_polls_to_guide_check_in	A strategy I use during class and presented in a previous lightning round.
The Power of Faculty Support Spaces. https://www.insidehighered.com/advice/2021/09/24/importance-support-spaces-faculty-well-being-opinion	I enjoyed attending the meetings.
Addressing substance use in online classes. https://www.insidehighered.com/views/2021/06/17/advice-dealing-alcohol-and-substance-use-online-classes-opinion	A situation that occurred during one of my classes.

Ask Yourself:

1. What activities do I enjoy leading my students/clients/etc. through?
2. What information do I share repeatedly with students/clients/etc.?
3. What skills have I learned to improve my teaching/therapeutic style, mentorship, or community activism work?
4. What topics have I presented in the past?
5. What activities have I engaged in and want to share about?
6. What situations have I sought support for?