Reviews of Books

This volume includes a discussion and classification of the nine manuscripts available of the Covenant Vivian (the author's spelling Vivian is an affectation. The better title, as Mr. A. Terracher has shown, is Chevalerie Vivien)1. In the course of his argument, the author has to cite many passages from the MSS. It is noted with regret that these citations are full of errors. He was evidently set to copying the MSS. without due previous training in paleography. If this supposition be correct, he is less to be blamed than those who allowed him to undertake such difficult work.

The following corrections of the author's readings are offered. On p. 16 and elsewhere, the reading should be molt (with a rare possibility at times of mote), instead of mout. The suggestion of: il li fora is in every manner impossible. On p. 17, I. Aevofes for MSS. A and B. Under line 581, why is greatest given? One should read graillés and ti graillés. Line 476: from this text one could never tell the reading of the MSS. P. 18: A has getes in l. 1179. P. 20: second l. from the bottom: il, instead of ils; last l.: instead of et son frère Laines, read: Faïnes; in same l., MS. D1 has: ses. In the last l. of the note, the MS. has four. P. 21: I. 403: Enfondit should be written Enfandit, as in the MS.; similarly, here and wherever it occurs, par mi. In I. 484: onfes; 487: mora and nes. Under I. 475, Malorsor is followed in the MS. by a period, indicating that the name is abbreviated. This should be shown. The full name was undoubtedly meant to be trisyllabic. In l. 615, MS. A has force, not ferce. P. 22: several of the readings of the MSS. for lines 404 ss. are erroneous. For example: I. 464: MS. A has hails, and in I. 468, mora; B, in this same l. has corones and not corronnes; E has in I. 465 the abbreviation for Ihesu, not Jehus, and has vous; in I. 469, this MS. bears aris, not ars; MSS. d have, in I. 468: leur . . . eserie, and the first l. quoted from D1 has vous. P. 25: often one cannot tell from what MS. the text is given, as here for l. 1045 ss. It is safe to say, however, that, in the first verse cited one should read Guillaumès, and, in the last, cueus. P. 24: under ll. 1595, 1596, if the author is going to read enfresi for B, he should read entreci for D1; the reading for D1 is: Tout le porfeur, and for B, detrenche; in the last l. but one on the page, the words should be ainsii,-vous. P. 25: the discussion of i noit (or voit) and the nominative case is due to a mistaken reading by the author, who took i noit (i noit) for i noit, thus seeing difficulties that are not in the text. MS. D1

2The author, however, has recently made a careful defense of the title as he gives it: vid. Zeitschrift für französische Sprache, XXXV (1910), pp. 177-178.
bears: Joost Bertrans et ses oncles Guilleme, and not: I auoir Bertran, etc., and B has: Li quens Guillemes (or Guillaume) juoit a l'echekier, and not L. q. G. i auoir (or voit), etc. P. 33: the word mes has been omitted (perhaps by the printer?) from the line cited under 314; two lines further, instead of frans the two MSS. mentiond have serians and serjant (i being of course transcribed j). P. 35: in the three lines from MS. E, teste is to be corrected to test, and Guibore to Guiobore. P. 36: in the third l, read: chite. P. 38: in the third l. of poetry cited, the author has corrected del to dex without indicating the fact. P. 39, in the first l quoted one should read adire as a single word, similarly on p. 44. P. 42: under l. 1977, A has cel, not del, and E has ritai ... copier, not iral ... chapier. P. 43: under ll. 530-41: parmi and ensui, as elsewhere, might better be written par mi and en mi; the hyphen in Inde Superior is contrary to the genius of the language, and is doubly objectionable in Old French; in the last l. cited, the MS. bears missudor. P. 44: under l. 590, it is preferable to read consuit (similarly in the second l. on the page), and del, instead of de le; the MS., it is true, contains an error, the scribe having apparently taken the initial t of truncant for a c, but in no case can one read: de le; the reading of E is aprere, and not as given. Under ll. 650, 691, A has: tant il murt ... regretez; the spelling bonne near the middle of this page calls for some comment. The author has repeatedly assimilated a nasal in the abbreviation to the following consonant. He should adopt a consistent practice, whatever it is. In the reading from B near the bottom of the page, the MS. has Voir, not Voire. P. 45: the reading for l. 395 is given thus: B(E: ... el vrai roi Iesu Crist, which is neither the reading for B nor for E. The first of these MSS. has: le vrai roi Iesu Crist, and the second: el crois Jhesu Crist. In the middle of this page is found the form Atexte; from what MS.? I do not know any MS. with this form; even if there be one, why go so far afield to seek such an untypical form? Is it because the more barbarous the spelling, the more learned it is supposed to be? Under 654, une should of course be une, and is probably an error of the printer. A little farther on, under the reading of E, the MS. bears sanglest, and the fourth l. from the bottom of the page should have estei (reading of A), or este (that of C). P. 46, l. 699: if the reading here is from A, the last word in the l. should be crei. C, to be sure, has cre. The reading of B as given here should bear Franchois. P. 47: in the fourth l. on the page, the text of B has vrentes. In the following l., one should read ploons, and in the l. below that, douge is preferable to douge. Under l. 1014, the abbreviation indicates quest, that is: qu'est. P. 49: instead of: elme a la coife dorse, the MS. mentioned bears: kiame, tante coife dore. P. 50: l. 459, 460: B has arives, not armee. P. 51: in the second l. the word should be tenement. In the reading given for l. 665, E has giron; the words la tente, under l. 865, should be sa tente, according to C. The argument concerning the verb in l. 1087 (cf. p. 63) is absolutely valueless. Besides, the MSS. cited under the rubric Ex have all the nominativ case for the past participle. P. 52: under B, the text bears: He Gerara, and this l. is followed by one which the author omits for some reason: Fos me devies le scors amener. The omission should have been indicated. P. 53: the fifth l. on the page reads in the MS.: A tant e vos lor. The fact that the line is unintelligible is hardly a reason for not giving it as it stands. Under E, at the middle of the page, the second l. has in the MS. repren dons, and the l. following, bons brans; the last l. of this citation has a very serious blunder: instead of: vos et si grans, the MS. bears: u est la grans. Under l. 1688, read: Hui mais. P. 54, l. 94 reads in A: Et dus et princes, dunoines et chases. P. 55: l. 513 has: bran . . . tur; E has, as the last word in this l. maris, not maris; the l. following has viero, and the word paziens printed by the author in the next l. is entirely lacking in the MS.; in the last l. here cited from this MS., Paien should be Paiens. The variants of B also include errors: the MS. has in the second l. achier, and in the third, Paien. Under l. 96a, the order of words for MS. B is incorrect; it should be: En la v. e. P. 56: the last l. quoted from B in the middle of the page should have estoron; at the bottom of the page, the reading of A is: qui il prist a torner, and that of B has glachant. P. 58, first l.: read deuommes; under 1254*, B has cevol; l. 1351, MS. E: the word is written grefegne. P. 59: last two lines: here and everywhere the abbreviation for Jhesu has been misread. P. 61: in the second l., the reading should be: q'est; l. 792 ss.: the reading is not Joues, but Ja mes, as the syntax shows; lignages should be corrected to linages. P. 62: in the first l., the MS. bears Guichars. P. 63: under l. 1622 ss.: bran d'acier. P. 65: l. 1017: instead of mes, the word should be nies; in l. 1080, MS. E: read onnore or ounore. P. 69: from what MS. is the form morrez taken? Under 1165, E, the MS. has biaus nies. P. 72: l. 440: the MS. has Biax (or, of course, Biaux nies Gerart; l. 390: the MS. bears Vivien, and does not have at all the words se vos. L. 626: the MS. has: Vivien fot mais so dolor, and similarly the next l. includes errors, for MS. B has here: Vivien fot, dolor en at a chartes. In the following l., one should read suis, and in l. 630, Part low . . . en in se derraine; in l. 632, the MS. reads faill.

What shall be said of these many errors, whose number could easily be increased? Are they in part due to pure carelessness? It is not difficult to become confused among so many manuscripts, so much so, that I may have committed blunders in some of my readings given above. The author may excuse some of his omissions on the ground that it is impossible to offer all the variants, and this is of course perfectly correct. None the less, this much is certain: that the author's volume is, paleographically speaking, full of blunders. In many cases, these errors appear due to his inability to read the manuscripts; in others, however, he seems to have altered at will the real readings, which are so clear that he can not have mistaken them: for example, if l. 1877, cited on p. 42, reads in MS. E: Et je virai pries del estor capler, why state that it reads: Et je irai prises del estor chapler?

The author bases a classification of the manuscripts of the Chevalerie Vivien on such readings as he offers. Are his conclusions vitiated by the careless and defective treatment of the manuscripts? Can one build a firm structure on such insecure foundations? Unfortunately for the scientific standing of our studies, it is possible to erect a fairly strong building on such a foundation, but it must be done by avoiding too much weight on minute points. The author occasionally lays too much stress on such points, and his conclusions in these cases must be set aside, at least until they can be verified. In general, however, he draws his conclusions from broader data, and he shows no small skill in this sort of argument.

I agree with the author's statement that Gaudin le brun in Aliscans is a relatively late introduction,—a statement advanced by me years ago.8

Some valuable remarks concerning the petit vers are to be found on p. 14. . . . The force of the argument concerning the Saracen who brings news (p. 33) may well be doubted. . . . The author misunderstands (p. 46) the reasons why the hero's men decline to leave him? . . . The statement about the messenger (pp. 65, 66) is quite unwarranted, as also, in my opinion, the mention of Renoart in connection with the dream (p. 66). . . . The author's general conclusion concerning the text of the Chevalerie appears sound (p. 66), and the same may be said of his remarks about MS. A (pp. 67, 68). . . . In conclusion, let it be said that I am far from wishing to discourage Mr. Schulz from continuing his studies in the old epic. His defects are due to carelessness, and to lack of specific knowledge in certain lines. These are matters which time can cure, and we may yet see from his pen work that commands unqualified approval.
